they instead crowd out normal blood cells in the bone marrow, often inhibiting other cells from performing their intended functions.